...and the Beat Goes On!

Well, I know what it feels like to have great plans and feel overwhelmed by it all. Read on.

Do you want Gorveatte Consulting Inc. to help you with auditing your QMS? Give us a call or email us here.

You see, in 2021 I embarked on what I called a "50-year-old woman's coping plan" and started rock drumming lessons!

Learning something new invigorated me, it offered focus and yet also fun and freedom. I loved it! I practiced, I worked hard, and I invested time. I guess you could say that I invested in myself.

Then, life happened, and I started to place a lower priority on the things that brought me focus, fun, and freedom. I now realize that when I practiced less, I learned less.

Don't let this happen to you and your quality system. Don't lose the focus, the fun, and the freedom of your QMS. Continue your audits (aka "practice") and learn lots.

It's hard work, I know. Now, I am refocused on rock drumming and enjoying the fun and freedom it offers me so I can learn and therefore be more productive and creative in everything else in my life. I'm placing the right priority on investing in myself.

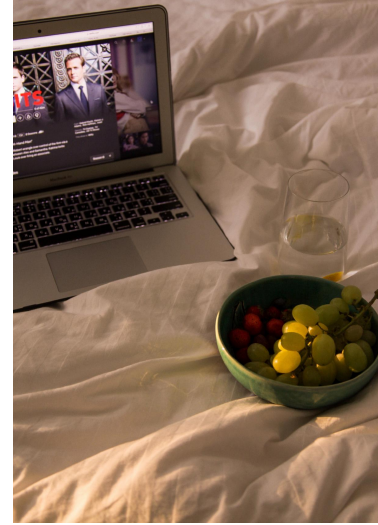

Remember to always invest in your organization and in your quality system. Conduct your audits, and learn from them. You too will be more productive and creative as a result. Remember, the beat goes on....

Did You Miss It?

If you couldn't locate the podcast from last month's newsletter link, it is: Series 3 / Episode 4 \(just like Star Wars a New Hope!\): Conversation with Susan Gorveatte

Ruth writes: "In my conversation with Susan Gorveatte her east coast Nova Scotia-type warmth shone through. We had a great discussion about how culture can be a trigger and support for creativity. Culture can enable the resilience and courage you need to ask questions and to think and engage differently."
