Turn the Lights Back On!

I just heard on the radio that Billy Joel is releasing his first new single in over 15 years, "Turn the Lights Back On". It's been more than 20 years since his last album.

Now, I am a huge Billy Joel fan, and those who know me, know that music is very inspiring for me. During COVID I started rock drumming, my radio is always on in my office and I am often caught singing (poorly) to the radio while house cleaning! You do what you have to do to be inspired.

In a "very accurate" article (it was online after all!), I read that Billy Joel stopped writing lyrics because he got tired of that particular format - he was no longer inspired. Fifteen years is a long time to wait to become inspired and to try something new. I got to thinking, if someone like Billy Joel can do it, maybe we can too. When was the last time you took a (calculated) risk? When was the last time you tried something new? What inspires you?

Maybe this is the time to try something new. Let's look at your quality Management System. What changes can you make? Would you like to put out something new? A new process, a new form a new database, a new tech addition?

It's never too late to turn the lights back on. Let's be inspired, turn up the music, and sing along to a new beat.
