Writing Nonconformances That Stick

Do you struggle with writing nonconformity statements that make sense and that your team can understand? If your team doesn't understand the problem, how can you expect them to solve the problem?

Writing great nonconformity statements your team can understand and action is a mix of practical magic. They need the right blend of "Condition Expected" (source of requirement and requirement) and "Condition Found" (source of evidence and evidence). Once you understand the 4 components of a Quality Nonconformity Statement, the formula is easy to follow over and over again. With a well-written nonconformity statement, your team can "hit the ground running" and solve the problem with effective actions that bring value to your organization. Need more help writing your nonconformances after your audits? Don't worry, we are here for you.

Let Gorveatte Consulting Inc. help you writing evidence-based nonconformity statements so you can grow and improve your Quality Management System.
